Its amino acid sequence shows a high proline content, but there is no homology to any known proline-rich antigens of mycobacteria. Novel M. tuberculosis proteins (see AAW31851-57) are claimed. These can be produced as recombinant proteins, especially in bacterial, yeast, fungal or higher eukaryote host cells, and used for diagnosing tuberculosis and other mycobacterial infections in humans or animals. The claimed proteins can also be used for epidemiological studies, for monitoring vaccination, and for the development of vaccines and

The protein contains 4 type II cohesin domains in the N-terminal portion of which the first domain (amino acid residues 28-192) is thought to bind CipA. The novel type II dockerin and cohesin domains can be used in complexes, especially enzyme complexes, to potentiate their catalytic actions in a synergistic manner.

The present sequence is a peptide encoded by one such probe. The probes are useful for measuring human gene expression in a human breast sample, where the probe hybridises at high stringency to a nucleic acid expressed in the human breast. The probes are useful for predicting, diagnosing, grading, staging, monitoring and prognosing diseases of the human breast, particularly those diseases with polygenic aetiology. The diseases include: breast cancer, disorders of development, inflammatory diseases of the breast, fibrocystic changes, proliferative interact with a central "scaffold" protein designated the cellulosome integrating protein (CipA; see AAW43108). The catalytic subunits interact with the Cip subunit via conserved 23 amino acid dockerin domains. Cip has been shown to contain 9 copies of a cohesin domain. The invention relates to the isolation of proteins binding to a novel dockerin type domain found in the C-terminal portion of Cip. The new domain is designated a type II dockerin domain (as compared to the type I domain found on the catalytic subunits of the cellulosome). The type II dockerin domain domain has some sequence similarity to the type I dockerins unable to bind type I cohesin domain. Multimeric protein, especially enzymatic, complexes are held together by protein-protein interactions between domains designated dockerins and cohesins, which are found on the catalytic and scaffold subunits respectively. An example of such a complex is the cellulose degrading protein complex from Clostridium thermocellum, known as the cellulosome. This complex comprises around 15 proteins including endoglucanases, cellobiohydratases, hemicellulases, e.g. xylanases or lichinases, which interact with a central "scaffold" protein designated the cellulosome sequence presented example O. a protein which binds

The fragments amplified by these primers can then be used as probes to screen human cDNA libraries for MPO cDNA. The MPO cDNA can then be inserted into a plasmid which is used to transform cells to produce MPO. The MPO sequence is capable of promoting colony formation of megakaryocytes, enlarging the size of megakaryocytes and stimulating the proliferation of multipotential stem cells. The factor may be used for treating thrombocytopenia and hematocytopenia. The purification method can be used to isolate MPO from human urine or serums of patients with aplastic anaemia, and from animal blood or urine by radiation exposing the animals to induce aplastic anaemia.

The present invention describes colon tumour associated proteins (I) and CC (II) and (II) can be used in gene therapy and vaccine production. (I) and CC (II) may be used in the prevention, diagnosts and treatment of diseases CC associated with inappropriate colon tumour associated protein (TCAP) CC expression, such as colonic cancer. For example, (I) and (II) may be used to treat disorders associated with decreased expression by CC expression, such as colonic cancer. For example, (I) and (II) may be CC used to treat disorders associated with decreased expression by CC excitivity of TCAPs by expressing inactive proteins or to supplement the CC patients own production of them. Additionally, (II) may be used to CC produce the TCAP proteins, by inserting the nucleic acids into a host CC complementary sequences may also be used as DNA probes in diagnostic CC complementary sequences may also be used as DNA probes in diagnostic CC quantitate the presence of similar nucleic acids in samples, and CC quantitate the presence of similar nucleic acids in samples, and CC also be used as antigens in the production of antibodies against TCAPs and in assays to identify modulators of TCAP expression and activity. The anti-(I) antibodies may also be used to down regulate CC as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples to the production of antibodies may also be used as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples to the production as a diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples to the presence of TCAPs in the presence of TCAPs in the presence of

CC lubricating molety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1-76
CC repeats of a motif having at least 50% identity to the sequence KEPAPTT
CC (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a CC human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a CC human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method
CC of diagnosing osteoarthritis or a predisposition to osteoarthritis by CC measuring the amount of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a CC indicates the presence of or predisposition to developing CC osteoarthritis. The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the CC treatment of osteoarthritis, where they may be used for lubricating CC mammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses.
CC The tribonectin, when formulated as a membrane, foam, gel or fibre, is CC useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured
CC tissues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion CC or trauma, or an artificial device e.g., an orthopaedic implant. In CC particular, one of the surfaces is pericardial tissue. DNA encoding a CC tribonectin may be used in gene therapy. The present sequence represents CC a substantial portion of a human MSF-derived tribonectin.

The invention relates to a human tribonectin which is a product of calternative splicing of the human MSF (megakaryocyte stimulating factor) cg gene. The tribonectin has at least one O-linked oligosaccharide clubricating molety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1-76 (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a cc human MSF derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a cc human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method co f diagnosing osteoarthritis or a predisposition to osteoarthritis by cmeasuring the amount of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a mammal, wherein an increased amount of MSF compared to a control costeoarthritis. The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the creatment of osteoarthritis, where they may be used for lubricating commammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses. Cc useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured ctissues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion cor trauma, or an artificial device e.g., an orthopaedic implant. In cc uniman tribonectin may be used in gene therapy. The present sequence represents

CC coxa vara-pericarditis (CACP) protein, or portions of the CACP protein.
CC The composition may further comprise a local anaesthetic. The composition
CC of the invention may be administered via intra-articular or intravenous CC injection. The human CACP protein is identified in the invention as CC cox protein (MSF) is located on chromosome 1925-31, and mutations in CC chis gene are responsible for the heritable disorder camptodactyly-
CC arthropathy-coxa vara-pericarditis, in which patients have synovial
CC hyperplasia without evidence of inflammation. CACP protein (MSF)
CC acts as a synovium lubricant, and can be used to lubricate tissue and CC oplied to reduce the symptoms of osteoarthritis. The composition may be CC applied to reduce the symptoms of osteoarthritis (e.g., joint pain, CC closs of range of movement or joint damage). The present sequence CC Note: This sequence is not given in its entirety in figure 4 of the CC sequence was therefore obtained from GenBank (U70316).

cc stimulating factor (MSP) precursor. The sequence covered by exons II, crim and IV encodes megakaryocyte stimulating factor (MSF). This criminating codon following exon IV. The colony stimulating factor (MSF). This criminating codon following exon IV. The colony stimulating factor (MSF). This criminating codon following exon IV. The colony stimulating factor (MSF). Exon I contains the initiating methionine proceeding exon II and a criminate in the region between amino acid residues 134 - 147. The colony transcript of this gene may be cleaved in different ways to criminaty transcript of this gene may be cleaved in different tays to criminaty transcript of this gene may be cleaved in different tays to compare also implicated in the stability, folding and processing of the synergy of MSF with other cytokines. Exons V - XII are believed to be implicated in the processing or folding of the appropriate structure of the cellular matrix or extracellular matrix processing. Sequence of the cellular matrix or extracellular matrix processing. Set the cocuring and non-naturally occuring MSF's may be characterised by various combinations of alternatively spliced exons from this sequence. The members of the MSF family.

The precursor CDNA sequence contains sequences derived from human CC megakarycoyte colony stimulating factor (meg-CSF). Exon I contains CC the initiating methionine, and encodes a classical mammalian protein CC secretion signal sequence. The sequence encoding the original meg-CSF CC includes exons II-IV and is thought to terminate in the region between CC amino acid residues 134 - 147. The primary transcript of this gene CC encoding a different ways to yield a family of mRNA's each CC encoding a different WSF protein. Exons V and VI are thought to be CC related to the activity of the factor and are also implicated in the CC stability, folding and processing of the molecule. These exons are CC cytokines. Exons V - XII are believed to be implicated in the CC processing or folding of the appropriate structure of MSF with other CC factor, i.e. one or more of these exons may contain sequences which CC direct proteolytic cleavage, adhesion, organisation of the cellular matrix or extracellular matrix processing. Both naturally occuring CC and non-naturally occuring MSF's may be characterised by various

Its amino acid sequence shows a high proline content, but there is no homology to any known proline-rich antigens of mycobacteria. Novel M. tuberculosis proteins (see AAW31851-57) are claimed. These can be produced as recombinant proteins, especially in bacterial, yeast, fungal or higher eukaryote host cells, and used for diagnosing tuberculosis higher eukaryote host cells, and used for diagnosing tuberculosis

The present sequence is obtained from a clustral X alignment with CC protain 608. Protein 608 was identified using the method of the invention After subjecting rat osteoplasts to mechanical stress. Expression of the CC after subjecting rat osteoplasts to mechanical stress. Expression of the CC identification of genes responsive to a specific method for the CC identification of genes responsive to a specific mechanical stress. The CC method comprises applying the mechanical stress to an organism (tissue CC crells comprising bone cells), isolating the specific cellular CC fractions and extracting mRNA from them, and differentially analysing the CC mRNA in comparison with control samples. The method is used to identify genes whose expression is responsive to a specific stress. The identified CC genes whose expression is responsive to a specific stress. The identified genes are employed in determining risk associated with a physiological or CC disease state. The risk determination methods are used for testing a controlling a physiological or disease state (especially osteoporosis or CC controlling a physiological or disease state (especially osteoporosis or CC its symptoms or other conditions involved in mechanical stress or its conditions involved in mechanical

The present invention relates to novel single exon nucleic acid probes (see AAI00010-AAI10067). The present sequence is a peptide encoded by one such probe. The probes are useful for measuring human gene expression in a human breast sample, where the probe hybridises at high stringency to a nucleic acid expressed in the human breast. The probes are useful for predicting, diagnosing, grading, staging, monitoring and prognosing diseases of the human breast, particularly those diseases with polygenic aetiology. The diseases include: breast cancer, disorders of development, inflammatory diseases of the breast, fibrocystic changes, prollferative cc and cohesins, which are found on the cattalytic and scaffold subunits or protein complex from Clostridium thermocellum, known as the cellulosome. The complex is complex is complex is complex is complex in collulosome. This complex comprises around 15 proteins including endoglucanases, cellubiohydratases, hemicellulases, e.g. xylanases or lichinases, which cellubiohydratases, hemicellulases, e.g. xylanases or lichinases, which celluborated with a central "scaffold" protein designated the cellulosome integrating protein (Clph, see AAW43108). The catalytic subunits of interact with the cip subunit via conserved 23 amino acid dockerin commains. Cip has been shown to contain 9 copies of a cohesin domain. The invention relates to the isolation of proteins binding to a novel dockerin type domain found in the C-terminal portion of Cip. The new compared to the catalytic subunits of the cellulosome). The type I dockerin domain has some sequence similarity to the type I dockerins II dockerin domain has some sequence similarity to the type I dockerins but is unable to bind type I cohesin domains. The sequence presented here is an example of a protein which binds the novel type II dockerin domain and is the product of the OlpB gene. The protein contains 4 type II cohesin domains in the N-terminal portion of which the first domain (amino acid residues 28-192) is thought to bind CipA. The novel type II dockerin and cohesin domains can be used in complexes, especially enzyme complexes, to potentiate their catalytic actions in a synergistic manner.

The present invention describes colon tumour associated proteins (I) and (II) can be used in gene therapy and vaccine production. (I) and CI in any be used in the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of diseases casociated with inappropriate colon tumour associated protein (TCAP) concertifying mutations or deletions in a patient's genome that affect the patients own production of them. Additionally, (II) may be used to protect on the protein of them the protein or to supplement the produce the TCAP proteins, by inserting the nucleic acids into a host complementary sequences may also be used as DNA probes in diagnostic complementary sequences may also be used as DNA probes in diagnostic complementary sequences of similar nucleic acids in samples, and therefore which patients may be in need of restorative tharapy. (I) may can be used as DNA probes in diagnostic complementary sequences of similar nucleic acids in samples, and therefore which patients may be in need of restorative tharapy. (I) may can be used as one used as one activity. The anti-(I) antibodies against TCAPs anti-(I) antibodies and antagonists may also be used to down regulate cas diagnostic as antigens in the production of antibodies may also be used complementary capents for detecting the presence of TCAP expression and activity. The anti-(I) antibodies may also be used complements for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples and antagonists of the presence of TCAPs in samples cased to down regulate cased as diagnostic agents for detecting the presence of TCAPs in samples and antagonists may also be used to down regulate cased and Annial activity. Fragments of this sequence (see AAR80039 and AAR80040) were used to produce the amplification primers shown in AAT04544 and AAT04545. The fragments amplified by these primers can then be used as probes to screen human cDNA libraries for MPO cDNA. The MPO cDNA can then be inserted into a plasmid which is used to transform cells to produce MPO. The MPO sequence is capable of promoting colony formation of megakaryocytes, enlarging the size of megakaryocytes and stimulating the proliferation of multipotential stem cells. The factor may be used for treating thrombocytopenia and hematocytopenia. The purification method can be used to isolate MPO from human urine or serums of patients with aplastic anaemia, and from animal blood or urine by radiation exposing the animals to induce aplastic anaemia.

of diagnosing osteoarthritis or a predisposition to osteoarthritis by comeasuring the amount of MSF or its fragment in a biological sample of a CC mammal, wherein an increased amount of MSF compared to a control CC indicates the presence of or predisposition to developing CC osteoarthritis. The tribonectin and DNA encoding it are useful in the CC treatment of osteoarthritis, where they may be used for lubricating CC mammalian joints, such as articulating joints of humans, dogs or horses. The tribonectin, when formulated as a membrane, foam, gel or fibre, is CC useful for inhibiting adhesion between two surfaces such as the injured ctissues of a mammal, where the injury is caused by a surgical insertion CC or trauma, or an artificial device e.g., an orthopaedic implant. In CC particular, one of the surfaces is pericardial tissue. DNA encoding a CC tribonectin may be used in gene therapy. The present sequence represents of a substantial portion of a human MSF-derived tribonectin.

The tribonectin has at least one O-linked oligosaccharide lubricating moiety and has a polypeptide sequence comprising 1.76 repeats of a motif having at least 50% identity to the sequence KEPAPTT (AAB29774). The invention also relates to a nucleic acid encoding a human MSF-derived tribonectin; a biocompatible composition comprising a human tribonectin for inhibiting tissue adhesion formation; and a method
